Canada's Bogie Man.
Beware of Americans, shun them as you would the plague, avoid them as you would something unclean, keep out of the "thin edge of the wedge," look to the East, and fall down before the idol of Imperial Preference, for there your allegiance is, whether sense dictates differently or no. Do everything a la "All Red," laugh to scorn any offers, be they of whatever sort and never so harmless, yes, even if they be truly beneficial, if they come to you on anything striped with red and white, or bear the least trace of a blue field with here and there a white star.

"Let us preserve our country for our King our children and our God." This is the warning that our good Canadian neighbors have had hurled at them for the past few months from many sides.

"The American Peril" to some Canadians—and unfortunately many of them occupy points of vantage from which they may promulgate their thought, sending it into fertile minds whose nonsense is well satisfied with the offered nonsense—is more real, or is professed to be more real, than is the Yellow Peril to our own fire-eating congressman, Richard Pearson Hobson, the oft-kissed hero of Santiago.

But the prophets of dire happenings are Cassandra born to an age too late to be of avail, for it is almost un conceivable to dream of a Canada more Americanized than is the Canada of to-day. Putting aside the political union, how much of Canada is American? We ride into the dominion on American cars, pulled by American engines which, in turn, are driven by Americans and forced along over the iron by American coal.

We alight from the station to hear "American" spoken, even to the slang phrases which delighted Broadway last week, when they fell from the lips of some vaudeville artist who this week is playing in Toronto and next week will "do" Montreal. The street car we take to our hotel like as not was made in an American shop.

At the morning's meal our orange is American, the silver is marked "Ghoram," the breakfast food wouldn't fool even an Englishman, while for dinner our chicken is a la Maryland, and if we be so constituted, we might wash it down with a little of that that made Milwaukee famous. And that nothing may break the chain, the man who takes your tips in American money stands in American shoes.

The hotel has American "accommodations," the telephone girl has that cheery American "line's busy," the public stenographer chatters her American gum, newspapers from New York—which is in America—line up side by side with the Canadian papers in the reading room—all carrying the same dispatches sent out by American news services—an American magazine is at your elbow, at the theatre you see a New York success and at the close you wonder why the orchestra is playing such a good old American piece as "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," until at last it dawns upon you that it isn't what you thought it was—the words are different: "God Save the King."

American auto smell of American gasoline and chauffeurs puff away at their American cigarettes. American pianos send forth their tones, while cheery voices tear American ragtime to pieces.

And so it is, all the way down the list, granting of course that to rob every article or its "By Special Permission" or by "Royal Warrant" would not be fair, America has invaded Canada—to the benefit of each.

"Made in America" would be unnecessary in the dominion.

"The thin of the wedge" is in and in as far as Americans of some generations to come want it.

But the "Purveyor to His Majesty the King" may in some future day pass from Canada, but only when Canada wants it. For Canada there is no "American Peril."—St. Albans Messenger.

A part of these goods are new to us, as we never had them until last week.

We have always had a 28-inch Galatea to sell for 16c. Now we have a Galatea eight inches wider for only 15c per yard. Not quite as heavy, that we believe will wear as long or longer and be more satisfactory. Just buy enough for one garment just to try. Hardly think that you will be able to find this width Galatea any where else in town.

Something new in Ripples. These come in tan and blue and white stripes, with check, also light blue check and green stripe for children. They are great sellers as they need no ironing, 15c per yard.

A Few Specials

We have a new idea in a ladies' and gents' umbrella. Its an umbrella that has 50 per cent. more spread than the old style umbrella.

A 24-inch umbrella spreads the same as a 27-inch old style and a 25-inch has a 40-inch spread, the same as a 30-inch old style so that the ordinary size ladies' umbrella will protect you better than the very largest size gents' umbrella.

These new umbrellas come with ladies' handles at $1.75 with gents' handles the same.
